THE HISTORY OF THE

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LONDON

The Royal Society of London, for the Improvement of Natural Knowledge, was instituted on the 28th of December, 1660, by a charter from Charles II. The members of the Society are called Fellows, and are divided into two classes, the Honorary and the Elective. The Honorary Fellows are those who have been elected by the Society, and the Elective Fellows are those who have been elected by the Society, and are entitled to the same rights and privileges as the Honorary Fellows.

The Society has since its institution, been distinguished by the patronage of the most illustrious monarchs, and the assistance of the most eminent statesmen. It has been the seat of the most valuable discoveries in natural philosophy, and the most important improvements in the arts and sciences. The Society has also been distinguished by the patronage of the most illustrious monarchs, and the assistance of the most eminent statesmen.
